

Resume Debate On Aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate resumed debate on its $4.2 billion foreign aid authorization bill today with a warning that if the battle continues much longer it could kill chances for civil rights legislation this year.

Senate leaders made it clear they would fight for their compromise plan to chop $385 million from the aid bill despite a rash of attempts to change the proposal. The bill at present is $300 million less than President Kennedy asked but $700 million more than the House voted.

Sen. George D. Aiken, D-Vt., a sponsor of the leadership proposal, said that attacks on foreign aid, led by such civil rights advocates as Sen. Wayne Morse D-Ore., gave House members an excuse to delay civil rights action on grounds the Senate would not have time to act before the session ends.

Sponsors of the leadership amendment rejected suggestions Monday that they withdraw or modify their proposal. They emphasized their decision by nailing down an agreement for a roll call vote on the proposal that assured it would not be withdrawn.

Other congressional news: Public Works: Some House members are hoping to secure passage this year of a $900 million job-producing public works bill by adopting new strategy to bypass the administration. Kennedy administration officials will not be asked to testify on the measure before a subcommittee to avoid putting them on the spot. The administration might find it difficult to endorse such a large spending program in view of their arguments for a tax cut.

Gronouski: Postmaster General John A. Gronouski is expected to be called by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee for questioning on his views about political activity by federal employees. Rep. H. R. Gross, R-Iowa, said he had asked that Gronouski be invited to testify. He claims that Gronouski recently urged the National Alliance of Postal Workers to take an active interest in politics.

Viet Nam: The Senate Foreign Relations Committee was scheduled to get a closed-door briefing on the situation in South Viet Nam from Secretary of State Dean Rusk today. The committee also was to consider President Kennedy's nomination of Douglas Henderson to be ambassador to Bolivia.

Mme. Nhu's father, Tran Van Chuong, former ambassador to the United States and a political foe of the deposed Diem government, took time out from his speaking tour of the West Monday morning to meet briefly with his daughter.

The 65-year-old diplomat, who had been feuding publicly with her, brushed aside questions from waiting newsmen after his hour-long talk with Mme. Nhu about their political differences which caused him to resign as ambassador.

"As soon as I learned of the tragic events, my heart was very near my daughter," said Chuong. "We spoke only of ourselves and our family."

Monday, the military leaders who deposed Diem named his former vice president, Nguyen Ngoc Tho, to head a provisional government but made it plain they were retaining most of the power.

In Singapore, reliable sources said Diem was killed by a Vietnamese soldier who fired a pistol into the top of his head, apparently after the president rejected a suicide chance. Ngo Dinh Nhu was shot down as he reached for a hand grenade in his belt, they said.

The new premier heads a cabinet of 12 civilians and three officers. It is expected to serve only until the new elections promised by the officers who led the coup.

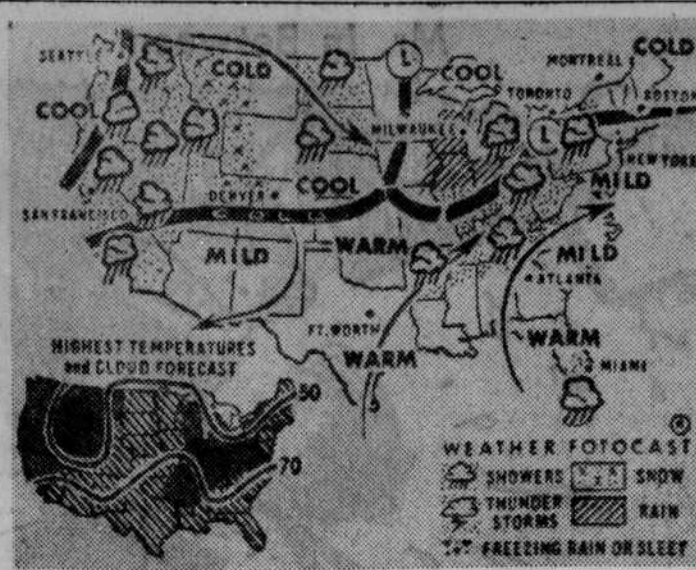

"It is the armed forces' policy to transfer political power to a popularly elected government when the situation permits," a junta announcement said Monday night.

No New President

Lt. Gen. Duong Van Minh, leader of the insurgent officers and chairman of the Revolutionary Council, announced that no new president would be named but the council would hold "the power of the head of state."

The junta also will control the budget, taxes, national security, and other executive powers as well as all legislative authority.

Hope For Concessions

Diplomats called this "salami tactics" — an attempt to gradually whittle away Western rights concerning Berlin.

Wallace Blasts Way US Court Made Decision

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI)—Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama said Monday night the U.S. Supreme Court knowingly permitted fraudulent testimony and deceitful tactics to influence its historic desegregation decision of 1954.

Wallace told a capacity 1,200 persons at Harvard University's Saunders Theater that lawyers for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were deceitful and misleading while presenting their case to the high court.

While 150 Negro and white pickets paraded outside the building, Wallace generally was received warmly by his audience but was interrupted about a half-dozen times by hisses.

Wallace, smiling and joking with the audience throughout the speech, also charged that NAACP's key witnesses misled the court.

"Not only was this the case but the court was also misled by NAACP attorneys," he said. In a bitter attack on the high court, Wallace said it "lacks a single man distinguished as a lawyer before his calling to the bench."

The historic 1954 decision "should have been based on well-known and unassailable legal principle. . . . Instead it was based on the incontrolled pleasure of the court," he said.

Earlier Wallace, who is touring New England to present his position on state's rights, said agitation in the South would subside if President Kennedy were defeated in 1964.

Wallace said that although some Southern demonstrations were caused by the Communists, the primary incentive was provided by Kennedy's statements on the issue.

In an interview by the Harvard Crimson, student newspaper, and WHRB, Harvard's student radio station, the governor said he was interested in defeating the Kennedy administration — not in putting himself in the White House.

Wallace is scheduled to deliver an address at Dartmouth College N.H.
